QUARTERLY CLOSE AUDIT REPORT
Dungeon Crawl: Seattle, Floor 5, the Estuary
Prepared by: the Quarterly Close Accountant, Office of the Controller
Scope: round one of the dance-off at the Pier 59 collapse, and the party's Groove ledger

Finding 1: Groove booked as revenue.
The party recorded the Groove it kept after round one as income. Groove is a derived stat, not money. It cannot be banked, sold or carried into the next quarter, and it comes back in full when a Crawler rests in a Safe Room (Crawl Handbook, Groove, Mana, Benched and Cancelled). Recommended remediation: stop asking the auditor to invoice it.

Finding 2: Unreported Ink Cloud.
During round one, the party leader, Barnaby, released an Ink Cloud that left the pickleweed slick for two rounds. No receipt was filed. The auditor danced Off-Beat for both rounds and wishes this noted in the record.

Finding 3: Tide schedule not disclosed.
The Estuary dance floor floods twice a day. Neither party disclosed the tide table before the dance-off began. The auditor recommends that every future dance-off on this floor start with a look at the tide.

Finding 4: Auditor self-assessment.
In the interest of full disclosure: the auditor's dance record before this quarter is one dance-off, at the 2019 holiday party, result not recorded. Footwork modifier +0. Recommended remediation: practice, after the close.

Finding 5: Known control weakness.
The auditor loses the tempo when anyone asks about their weekend. The auditor has documented this weakness and has not yet remediated it. The weekend was very nice.

Management response
The party leader disputes Finding 2 and requests a recount with fewer arms involved. Sergeant Cordula Vance accepts Findings 1 and 3, and has added the tide table to her pre-dance checklist.

Opinion
The party's records present fairly, in all material respects, a group that dances better than it keeps books. Audit status: closed, pending the next quarter.

Signed, the Quarterly Close Accountant